INDEX

INTRODUCTION ......................................................................................................................5

0. INTRODUCTION ...........................................................................................................5

1. RESEARCH BACKGROUND: THE ISSUE OF THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW
........................................................................................................................................5

1.0 Introduction..................................................................................................................5
1.1 The multifaceted character of the criminal law .........................................................6
1.2 ‘To use with caution’: the issue of the legitimacy of criminal law ..............................7
1.3 Different sources of legitimacy of criminal law: instrumental and normative approaches ..........................................................................................................................8
1.4 Is the legitimacy of criminal law a EU problem? ......................................................10

2. RESEARCH QUESTION .................................................................................................12

3. METHODOLOGY ..........................................................................................................13

3.0 Introduction................................................................................................................13
3.1 The general methodology: a descriptive-evaluative criminal law theory .................14
3.2 The specific methods (the theoretical framework): ‘tailored’ national criminalisation theories ................................................................................................................................16
3.3 The specific methods (the sources): EU primary law, EU policy documents and EU secondary law .....................................................................................................................17

4. STATE OF THE ART .....................................................................................................22

4.0 Introduction................................................................................................................22
4.1 The existing literature on the subject of harmonisation of criminal law ..................23
4.2 The original contribution: looking at the impact of harmonisation of criminal law on individuals and at its theoretical justifications .................................................................26

5. STRUCTURE OF THE THESIS ....................................................................................27

THE ISSUE OF THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW ........................................31

0. INTRODUCTION ...........................................................................................................31

1. THE PROBLEM OF THE LEGITIMACY OF CRIMINAL LAW .....................................32

1.0 Introduction................................................................................................................32
1.1 The special character of the criminal law: a consequences-based approach .............32
1.2 The consequences of the criminal law: the impact on individuals’ liberty as a defining feature ..................................................................................................................35
1.3 The consequences of the criminal law: the impact on individuals’ dignity as a defining feature ..........................................................36
1.4 The consequences of the criminal law: higher procedural safeguards as a non defining feature .................................................................40
1.5 The ensuing duty to justify criminalisation: the issue of the legitimacy of criminal law ..........................................................41
1.6 Defining the concept of the legitimacy of criminal law ........................................41
1.7 The legitimate content for the criminal law: origins of the debate ...................44
1.8 The legitimate content of the criminal law: the scholarly nature of the debate ......45
1.9 The legitimate content for the criminal law: the contribution of national constitutional law ........................................................................46

2. NORMATIVE AND INSTRUMENTAL APPROACHES TO THE LEGITIMACY OF CRIMINAL LAW ..........................................................................................................................50
2.0 Introduction ......................................................................................50
2.1 Normative and instrumental approach: definitions ........................................51
2.2 History of the normative approach: harm theory and legal interests theory ..........52
2.3 History of the instrumental approach: utilitarianism and law and economics ......56
2.4 History of the instrumental approach: regulatory and symbolic criminal law........60
2.5 Normative and instrumental approaches as expression of modern criminal law: the central position for the individual ..........................................................................................62
2.6. Normative approach to the legitimacy of criminal law: a stronger importance for individuals’ liberty and dignity ..........................................................63
2.7 Instrumental approach: a lesser importance for individuals’ liberty and dignity.....65
2.8 Normative and instrumental approaches: conceptually distinct but not mutually exclusive ..............................................................................................67
2.9 A (relative) plead in favour of an integrated approach with an emphasis on the normative dimension ..................................................................................67

3. THE PERTINENCE OF THE QUESTION OF THE LEGITIMACY OF CRIMINAL LAW TO THE EU ..........................................................................................................................68
3.0 Introduction ......................................................................................68
3.1. The EU limited range of action ..........................................................69
3.2 Direct and indirect EU law influence on national criminal law .........................70
3.3 The direct influence of Conventions, Joint Actions, Framework Decisions and Directives ..................................................................................72
3.4 The obligation to implement EU criminalisation policy decisions: the availability of infringement proceedings ................................................75
3.5 The obligation to implement EU criminalisation policy decisions: the unavailability of direct effect ..................................................................................76
3.6 More on direct effect: Taricco as a game changer? ..........................77
3.6 A semi effective obligation to implement EU criminalisation choices ..........79
3.7 The degree discretion for Member States when implementing EU criminalisation choices .................................................................................................................................79
3.8 EU obligations to impose the inclusion of imprisonment sanctions within national criminal law ......................................................................................................................................82
3.9 EU ‘de facto’ criminalisation powers and the issue of the legitimacy of EU criminal law ..................................................................................................................................................84

4. THE IMPORTANCE FOR INDIVIDUALS’ LIBERTY AND DIGNITY WITHIN THE EU LEGAL ORDER: IMPLICATIONS FOR THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW ....86
4.0 Introduction ........................................................................................................86
4.1 The progressive acknowledgement of EU fundamental rights and EU founding values ............................................................................................................................................................87
4.2 The Lisbon provisions on EU values and EU fundamental rights .....................88
4.3 Respecting EU founding values and fundamental rights: the rule of law/coherence dimension ................................................................................................................................................90
4.4 Respecting EU founding values and fundamental rights: the legitimacy and identity-building dimension ................................................................................................................91
4.5 An EU constitutional law plead for an integrated approach to the legitimacy of criminal law with an emphasis on the normative dimension ...........................................93

5. CONCLUDING REMARKS .......................................................................................94

DESIGNING THE FRAMEWORK: RATIONALES FOR HARMONISATION AND THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW .................................................................97
0. INTRODUCTION ........................................................................................................97
1. A DEFINITION OF HARMONISATION .................................................................98
1.0 Introduction ..........................................................................................................98
1.1 The meaning of harmonisation in natural language ..........................................98
1.2 The meaning of harmonisation in the legal context ...........................................99
2. DOES HARMONISATION HAVE AN INHERENT NORMATIVE, VALUE-BASED, DIMENSION? .......................................................................................................................100
2.0 Introduction .........................................................................................................100
2.1 Harmonisation with a normative dimension: harmonising rules to impose a qualitative better standard ..................................................................................................................101
2.2 Harmonisation without a normative dimension: harmonising rules to create a level playing field .......................................................................................................................103
3. Harmonisation of National Legislation as a Strategy of EU Integration ................................................................. 104

4. Four Rationales for EU Harmonisation of Crimes’ Definitions ........ 108
   4.0 Introduction ................................................................................................................................................... 108
   4.1 Virtuous and hidden, autonomous and instrumental rationales .................. 109
   4.2 The ‘normative rationale’: using harmonisation of criminal law to secure that undesirable conducts are repressed all across Europe ............................................................. 110
   4.3 The ‘social engineering rationale(s)’: using harmonisation of criminal law to achieve some social engineering goals ........................................................................................................ 111
   4.4 The ‘cooperation rationale’: using harmonisation of criminal law to facilitate judicial cooperation ................................................................................................................................. 113
   4.5 The ‘regulatory rationale’: use harmonisation of criminal law to secure the enforcement of EU law ............................................................................................................................... 116

   5.0 Introduction ................................................................................................................................................... 117
   5.1 Normative rationale: a normative legitimacy for EU criminal law ................ 118
   5.2 Social engineering rationale(s): an instrumental and normative legitimacy for EU criminal law .................... 119
   5.3 Cooperation rationale: an instrumental legitimacy for EU criminal law ........... 121
   5.4 Regulatory rationale: an instrumental legitimacy for EU criminal law ............ 124

6. Concluding Remarks ................................................................................................................................. 125

THE APPROACH WITHIN EU PRIMARY LAW: ANY INDICATION FROM SUBSIDIARITY AND PROPORTIONALITY? .................................................. 129

0. Introduction ................................................................................................................................................... 129

1. The EU Principle of Subsidiarity ................................................................. 130
   1.0 Introduction ................................................................................................................................................... 130
   1.1 The problem of powers allocation across levels within the EU legal order: static and dynamic dimensions .................... 130
   1.2 The principle of subsidiarity: Article 5(3) TEU .............................................................................................. 132
   1.3 The principle of subsidiarity: the efficiency based substance of the test ............ 133
   1.4 More on the efficiency-based test: Kumm’s collective action problem ........... 136
   1.5 Allocation of powers within the EU: beyond efficiency considerations ............ 137

2. The EU Principle of Proportionality ................................................................. 138
   2.0 Introduction ................................................................................................................................................... 138
   2.1 Prospective and retrospective notions of proportionality ........................................ 138
2.2 Proportionality in the EU legal order: administrative proportionality ..........140
2.3 Proportionality in the EU legal order: jurisdictional proportionality...............141
2.4 Proportionality in the EU legal order: free movement proportionality.........143
2.5 Proportionality in the EU legal order: criminal law proportionality...........143
2.6 What kinds of proportionality are relevant to the harmonisation of crimes’ definitions?.........................................................................................................144

3. HOW TO CARRY OUT SUBSIDIARITY AND PROPORTIONALITY TESTING IN THE CONTEXT OF EU CRIMINALISATION........................................................................148

3.0 Introduction........................................................................................................148
3.1 The legitimate objective test in the context of EU criminalisation ..............149
3.2 The subsidiarity test in the context of EU criminalisation .......................150
3.3 The proportionality test in the context of EU criminalisation .................151
3.4 How to carry the necessity test: are harmonised civil or administrative sanctions less intrusive?...............................................................................................................152
3.5 How to carry the necessity test: are harmonised effective, dissuasive and proportionate sanctions less intrusive?...............................................................153
3.6 How to carry the necessity test: is mutual recognition less intrusive? .........153
3.7 How to assess proportionality stricto sensu: when are individuals’ and Member States’ interests disproportionally compressed?..................................................156

4. SUBSIDIARITY AND PROPORTIONALITY TESTING IN THE CONTEXT OF THE NORMATIVE RATIONALE .........................................................................................157

4.0 Introduction........................................................................................................157
4.1 Normative rationale: a Treaty based objective? (Legitimate interest test) ....157
4.2 Normative rationale: is EU action justified? (Subsidiarity test) ..................158
4.3 Normative rationale: is EU action proportionate? (Proportionality test) .......162

5. SUBSIDIARITY AND PROPORTIONALITY TESTING IN THE CONTEXT OF THE ‘SOCIAL ENGINEERING’ RATIONALES ...............................................................................165

5.0 Introduction........................................................................................................165
5.1 Free movement rationale: a Treaty based objective (Legitimate interest test)? ....166
5.2 Free movement rationale: is EU action justified (Subsidiarity test)? ..........166
5.3 Free movement rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? .....168
5.4 Justice rationale: a Treaty based objective (Legitimate interest test)? .......169
5.5 Justice rationale: is EU action justified (Subsidiarity test)? .....................171
5.6 Justice rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? ..........171
5.7 Socialising rationale: a Treaty-based objective (Legitimate interest test)? ....173

6. SUBSIDIARITY, PROPORTIONALITY TESTING IN THE CONTEXT OF THE COOPERATION RATIONALE ....................................................................................174
6.0 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 174
6.1 Cooperation rationale: a Treaty-based objective (Legitimate interest test)? .............. 175
6.2 Cooperation rationale: is EU action justified (Subsidiarity test)? ......................... 175
6.3. Cooperation rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? – distinguishing the three cases .................................................................................... 177
6.4 Cooperation rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? – the case of double criminality ................................................................................................. 178
6.5 Cooperation rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? – the case of the JHA Actors ..................................................................................................... 179
6.6 Cooperation rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? – the case of mutual trust ........................................................................................................... 182
7. Subsidiarity, and proportionality in the context of the regulatory rationale
    ........................................................................................................................................ 184
7.0 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 184
7.1 Regulatory rationale: a Treaty based objective (Legitimate interest test)? .......... 185
7.2 Regulatory rationale: is EU action justified (Subsidiarity test)? ......................... 185
7.3 Regulatory rationale: is EU action proportionate (Proportionality test)? .......... 186
8. Subsidiarity, and proportionality: what indications on approach to the legitimacy of EU criminal law? ................................................................................................................ 189
8.0 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 189
8.1 Subsidiarity and the legitimacy of EU criminal law: pointing towards an instrumental approach ................................................................................................. 189 8.2 Proportionality and the legitimacy of EU criminal law: providing a framework for incorporating a normative approach ......................................................................... 192 8.3 Proportionality stricto sensu as the word that saves the legitimacy of EU criminal law? ............................................................................................................................... 196
9. Concluding remarks .................................................................................................... 197

THE APPROACH IN EU PRIMARY LAW: WHAT INSIGHTS FROM THE EU COMPETENCES (SECURITISED CRIMINALISATION) ................. 201
0. Introduction ................................................................................................................. 201
1. A classification of EU criminalisation competences: securitised vs.
    functional criminalisation ......................................................................................... 202
2. EU securitised criminalisation under the third pillar .............................................. 206
    2.0 Introduction ............................................................................................................. 206
    2.1 The institutional framework: the place of harmonisation from Maastricht to Amsterdam ............................................................................................................. 207

428
2.2 The legitimacy of criminal law: prominence of instrumental approach in the third pillar ............................................................................................................................ 208

3. THE EU CRIMINALISATION COMPETENCES IN LISBON ...................... 211

4. EU SECURITISED CRIMINALISATION UNDER LISBON .................. 219
  4.0 Introduction ........................................................................................................ 219
  4.1 A systemic interpretation of Article 83 TFEU .................................................. 219
  4.2 A textual interpretation of Article 83(1) TFEU: the introduction of general requirements .................................................................................. 222
  4.3 A textual interpretation of Article 83(1) TFEU: the cross-border dimension ....... 225
  4.4 A textual interpretation of Article 83(1) TFEU: the serious crime dimension ...... 228
  4.5 The normative dimension for criminal law in Lisbon Treaty and EU values ...... 232

5. CONCLUDING REMARKS .................................................................................. 233

THE APPROACH IN EU PRIMARY LAW: WHAT INSIGHTS FROM THE EU COMPETENCE (FUNCTIONAL CRIMINALISATION) .............. 237

0. INTRODUCTION ......................................................................................... 237

1. THREE METHODOLOGICAL REMARKS: LANGUAGE, SOURCES AND AIM OF THE CHAPTER .......................................................................................................................... 238
  1.0 Introduction ........................................................................................................ 238
  1.1 The language of the chapter: enforcement of EU norms, objectives, or policies? 238
  1.2 The sources and the structure of the chapter: the focus on case law .......... 239
  1.3 The aim of the chapter: investigating into the presence of regulatory and normative rationales .................................................................................................................. 239

2. THE FIRST PHASE OF THE COURT’S CASE LAW: SANCTIONING (POTENTIALLY CRIMINALISATION) OBLIGATIONS .................. 241
  2.0 Introduction ........................................................................................................ 241
  2.1 The initial institutional silence on the subject of EU law enforcement .......... 242
  2.2 1977 The Amsterdam Bulb case: optional criminalisation obligations ........ 244
  2.3 1989 Greek Maize case: conditional criminalisation obligations .......... 244
  2.4 The integrated (instrumental and normative) legitimacy for criminal law in the first phase of the Court’s case law .............................................................. 246

3. THE SECOND PHASE OF THE COURT’S CASE LAW: THE EC COMPETENCE TO IMPOSE CRIMINALISATION OBLIGATIONS ........ 248
  3.0 Introduction ........................................................................................................ 248
  3.1 The 2005 Environmental crime case: the introduction of EC criminalisation competence .................................................................................................................. 249
3.2 The 2007 Ship Source pollution case: the confirmation of EC criminalisation competence .................................................................251
3.3 The instrumental approach in the 2005 Environmental crime and the 2007 Ship Source Pollution case.................................................................252
3.4 The normative approach in the 2005 environmental crime case ...............253
3.5 Instrumental and normative approaches in the Commission and Parliament’s reaction ..................................................................................257
3.6 The normative approach in the 2007 criminal law case ..........................259

4. THE TREATY OF LISBON: THE FINAL (INSTRUMENTAL) WORD? ................262
4.0 Introduction ........................................................................................262
4.1 The text of Article 83(2) TFEU ........................................................................263
4.2 Article 83(2) TFEU and the regulatory rationale as a standing alone one ........264
4.3 Article 83(2) TFEU and the absence of the cooperation rationale ...............266
4.4 The instrumental legitimacy for the criminal law in Article 83(2) TFEU ..........268

5. CONCLUDING REMARKS ........................................................................269

THE APPROACH WITHIN EU POLICY DOCUMENTS: WHAT INSIGHTS FROM VIENNA TO STOCKHOLM AND THE EU CRIMINAL POLICY DOCUMENTS? ...............................................................................................................271

0. INTRODUCTION .......................................................................................271

2. JHA PROGRAMS: THE (COMPLEMENTARY) NORMATIVE APPROACH IN STOCKHOLM (2009) ........................................................................................................276

2.0 Introduction ..........................................................................................276
2.1 Stockholm: the centrality of fundamental rights and of the individual ..........276
2.2 Stockholm: the attenuation of the instrumental approach .........................277
2.3 Stockholm: the acknowledgement of the normative approach ...................279
2.4 Commission and Parliament’s reaction to Stockholm .................................280

3. JHA PROGRAMS: THE SILENCE IN THE 2014 STRATEGIC GUIDELINES ........281

4. THE EU CRIMINALISATION POLICY DOCUMENTS: THE CORE OF THE DISCUSSION ON LEGITIMACY ..........................................................................................283

5. THE 2009 COUNCIL’S CONCLUSIONS: THE IMPORTANCE OF A NORMATIVE, HARM-BASED APPROACH ..................................................................................287

6. THE 2011 COMMISSION’S COMMUNICATION: HINTING AT AN INTEGRATED APPROACH .........................................................................................291
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6.0 Introduction</td>
<td>6.0 Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.1 Aim and scope of the 2011 Commission’s Communication</td>
<td>6.1 Aim and scope of the 2011 Commission’s Communication</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.2 The introduction: a strong focus on an instrumental legitimacy for criminal law</td>
<td>6.2 The introduction: a strong focus on an instrumental legitimacy for criminal law</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.3 General principles justifying the resort to criminal law: a hinted instrumental approach</td>
<td>6.3 General principles justifying the resort to criminal law: a hinted instrumental approach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.4 The selection of policy areas deserving criminal sanctions: a hinted integrated approach</td>
<td>6.4 The selection of policy areas deserving criminal sanctions: a hinted integrated approach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.5 Concluding remarks: the Commission’s integrated agenda with an emphasis on the instrumental approach</td>
<td>6.5 Concluding remarks: the Commission’s integrated agenda with an emphasis on the instrumental approach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.0 Introduction</td>
<td>7.0 Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.1 Aims and scope of the 2012 Parliament’s Resolution</td>
<td>7.1 Aims and scope of the 2012 Parliament’s Resolution</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.2 The substance of the Resolution: an integrated, damage-based, approach</td>
<td>7.2 The substance of the Resolution: an integrated, damage-based, approach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.0 Introduction</td>
<td>8.0 Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.1 The growing importance of the normative approach to the legitimacy of criminal law</td>
<td>8.1 The growing importance of the normative approach to the legitimacy of criminal law</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.2 The EU policy documents and EU primary norms: synchronies and ruptures</td>
<td>8.2 The EU policy documents and EU primary norms: synchronies and ruptures</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9. CONCLUDING REMARKS</td>
<td>9. CONCLUDING REMARKS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>0. INTRODUCTION</td>
<td>0. INTRODUCTION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1. WHY IS A COMMON APPROACH TO THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW HARD TO FIND: THREE FEATURES OF EU CRIMINALISATION</td>
<td>1. WHY IS A COMMON APPROACH TO THE LEGITIMACY OF EU CRIMINAL LAW HARD TO FIND: THREE FEATURES OF EU CRIMINALISATION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.0 Introduction</td>
<td>1.0 Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1 The political character of EU criminalisation</td>
<td>1.1 The political character of EU criminalisation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.2 The occasional event-driven character of EU criminalisation</td>
<td>1.2 The occasional event-driven character of EU criminalisation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.3 The patchwork, incoherent, structure of EU criminal law</td>
<td>1.3 The patchwork, incoherent, structure of EU criminal law</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.4 The choice of case studies</td>
<td>1.4 The choice of case studies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.0 Introduction</td>
<td>2.0 Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.1 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia’s context: the EU fight against racism</td>
<td>2.1 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia’s context: the EU fight against racism</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
2.2 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia: the criminalisation of hate speech and of denialism

2.3 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia’s normative rationale: protecting EU values

2.4 More on the normative rationale: the safety of the victims as protected interests in hate crimes

2.5 More on the normative rationale: the safety of the victims and public order as protected interests in denialism

2.6 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia’ cooperation rationale: is transnational crime really the problem?

2.7 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia: a complementary social engineering rationale?

2.8 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia: a normative approach to the legitimacy of criminal law

2.9 The 2008 FD on racism and xenophobia and the Amsterdam Treaty: a normative approach in an instrumental context

3.0 Introduction

3.1 The EU fight against market abuse in context: the EU and financial crimes

3.2 The EU fight against market abuse: the road to (the use of) criminal law

3.3 The 2014 MAD: the criminalisation of insider dealing, unlawful disclosure of information and market manipulation

3.4 The 2014 MAD’s regulatory rationale: three arguments in favour of the effectiveness of criminal law

3.5 More on the regulatory rationale: the weakness of the empirical data

3.6 The 2014 MAD’s normative rationale: the seriousness threshold

3.7. The 2014 MAD: an integrated approach to the legitimacy of EU criminal law

3.8 The 2014 MAD and the Treaty of Lisbon: an integrated approach in an instrumental context

4. Concluding Remarks

CONCLUSIONS

0. Introduction

1. The main arguments of the thesis

1.1 The issue of the legitimacy of (EU) criminal law

1.2 Designing the framework: rationales for harmonisation and the legitimacy of EU criminal law
1.3 The approach within EU primary law: any indication from subsidiarity and proportionality? ..........................................................365
1.4. The approach within EU primary law: what insights from EU competences (securitised criminalisation) .........................................................366
1.5 The approach within EU primary law: what insights from EU competences (EU functional criminalisation) .................................................................367
1.6 The approach within EU policy documents: what insights from Vienna to Stockholm and the EU criminal policy documents? ................................369
1.7 The approach within EU secondary law: what insights from the 2008 racism and xenophobia framework decision and the 2014 market abuse directive? .........................370

2. AN ANSWER TO THE RESEARCH QUESTION: THE GROWING IMPORTANCE OF A NORMATIVE APPROACH AND ITS IMPLICATIONS ..........................................................371

3. TWO POSSIBLE AVENUES FOR FURTHER RESEARCH ........................................375
   3.1 First avenue for future research: the internal coherence of EU criminalisation instruments ..................................................................................375
   3.2 Second avenue for future research: a general comparative overlook on the normative dimension of EU criminal law ........................................376

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS ..................................................................................379

BIBLIOGRAPHY ..................................................................................................381

INDEX ..................................................................................................................423