

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	III
Table of contents	V
A word about language choices and transliteration	IX
List of abbreviations	XI
Introduction	1
PART 1. THE CREATION OF A BELGIAN JEWRY AND THE PORTENTS OF CHANGE 1830-1918	15
1.1. A renewal of Jewish life (1780-1880)	19
1.1.1. The first ‘substantial’ Jewish migration movement to the Belgian regions.	20
1.1.2. Jews and the Belgian state: Towards a new social contract.	26
1.1.3. The Consistory and its religious and political doctrine.	29
1.1.4. Belgian society’s perception of Jews.	35
1.2. The first Eastern European Jewish migration movement and the diversification of Jewish life (1880-1914)	45
1.2.1. Brussels: An expanded community and the Consistory’s declining authority.	47
1.2.2. Antwerp: The rise of a new Jewish centre and the dual-track history of Belgium’s Jewish community.	56
Religious diversification.	64
1.2.3. Towards new secular Jewish identities: Zionism and yiddishkayt.	70
The Zionist movement: New perspectives and struggles.	70
The student colonies, left-wing Jewish politics, and the fledgling Yiddish cultural scene.	76
1.3. The First World War and the Belgian Jewish experience (1914-1918)	85
1.3.1. The start of hostilities.	85
1.3.2. Belgium’s Jewish diaspora abroad.	87
1.3.3. Jewish life in occupied Belgium.	90
Conclusions	103

PART 2: JEWISH IMMIGRATION TO BELGIUM IN THE 1920s	107
2.1. The ‘second Eastern European Jewish migration movement’ and the changing face of Belgian Jewish society	109
2.1.1. Continued immigration under a new international order.	109
2.1.2. Belgium as transit and new Jewish destination point.	115
2.1.3. Continued diversification: The changing face of Belgian Jewish society.	121
2.2. The creation of a ‘Jewish economy’	135
2.3. Reception of Jewish immigrants, charity, and the social problems of migration	155
2.3.1. Jewish women in the migration.	162
2.3.2. Credit unions and ‘the Jewish economy’.	167
Conclusions	171
PART 3: THE EMERGENCE OF A 'BELGIAN JEWISH PROLETARIAT', JEWISH LEFT-WING POLITICS IN BELGIUM	175
3.1. The Jewish Left and the creation of a Jewish socialist counterculture	177
3.1.1. The Jewish workers’ cultural associations: From Jewish proletarian clubs to communist hubs.	182
3.1.2. Class-against-class: Communist agitation and political repression.	190
3.1.3. Consolidation: The creation of an alternative Jewish society and its limits.	196
3.2. The Jewish labour movement in Belgium: Local anchorage, international orientation	203
3.2.1. A common struggle: The Jewish Left and the Belgian working-class parties.	204
The Parti Communiste de Belgique-Kommunistische Partij van België (PCB-KPB) and its Jewish subsection.	205
The Belgian Workers’ Party (POB-BWP) and the Jewish Left.	209
3.2.2. The Jewish labour parties in Belgium: A small link in a vast transnational chain.	218
Jewish Communist activists and the International (Jewish) Communist world.	220
Zion calls: Supporting the Jewish working class in Palestine.	223
3.3. Organising the ‘Jewish economy’: Trade unions and trade associations	227
3.3.1. The trade unions: Unionising the Jewish immigrant workers, trials and tribulations.	228
The Diamond industry: A case study of Belgian-Jewish relations and union work.	233
3.3.2. Jewish trade associations: The organisation of the Jewish petty bourgeoisie and the Left.	252

The Jewish Artisans' Associations.	255
The Jewish Street Traders' Associations.	260
Conclusions	271
PART 4: BUILDING A NATION: THE ZIONIST MOVEMENT IN BELGIUM	275
4.1. The Belgian Zionist movement during the interwar period: An institutional overview	277
4.1.1. Brussels: The emergence of a stable Jewish national life.	278
4.1.2. Antwerp: The Belgian Zionist bulwark.	287
4.1.3. The provinces and student activism.	299
4.1.4. The Zionist Federation of Belgium.	305
The opposition on the Left.	306
The opposition on the Right.	312
4.2. The Zionist infiltration of the official Jewish religious institutions and its opponents	317
4.2.1. The Zionist infiltration of Brussels' religious communities and its position in the Consistory.	318
4.2.2. An orthodox backlash in Antwerp: The power struggle over Machsike Hadass.	333
4.3. The nature of 'Belgian Zionism'	353
4.3.1. Disseminating a Jewish national identity.	354
4.3.2. A new Jewish Belgian existence.	366
4.3.3. The Belgian Zionist movement's role as a political entity and special interest group.	371
Conclusions	379
PART 5: MEETING POINTS BETWEEN THE JEWISH ESTABLISHMENT AND JEWISH IMMIGRANT SOCIETY	383
5.1. Jewish philanthropy as a meeting point in Belgian Jewish society	385
5.1.1. Brussels: A tentative but incomplete convergence in Jewish philanthropic work.	387
5.1.2. Antwerp: Towards an integrated Jewish philanthropy.	396

5.2. A limited engagement in Brussels: Intellectual societies	413
5.3. The drive towards a representative Jewish religious community in Antwerp	421
Conclusions	433
PART 6: THE 'JEWISH CRISIS' OF THE LATE 1930s AND THE FUTILE STRUGGLE FOR LEADERSHIP	437
6.1. Belgian liberalism under strain: Rising xenophobia and an emerging antisemitic movement, 1933-1940	441
6.1.1. Prejudice, tolerance, indifference, and isolated acts of antisemitism: before 1933.	444
6.1.2. Economic deprivation, the first Jewish refugee crisis, rising xenophobia, and the emergence of an antisemitic movement, 1933-1937.	450
6.1.3. Radicalisation: Antisemitism breaks out into the open, 1937-1940.	460
6.2. Jewish responses	473
6.2.1. Immigrant responses: Towards a united Jewish front, 1933-1938.	474
Brussels	476
Antwerp	485
6.2.2. Belgian Jewry in the capital responds.	493
6.2.3. The first influx of Jewish refugees: Jewish solidarity stretched to its limits, 1933-1938.	503
6.2.4. The fight against antisemitism in Belgium.	513
6.2.5. The struggle for 'Jewish rights'.	522
6.3. Munich, the Phony War, and the limits of Jewish politics	533
6.3.1. Increased isolation, the turn inwards, and the illusionary prospects of Jewish unity, 1938-1940.	534
6.3.2. The second Jewish refugee crisis: The system unravels, 1938-1940.	545
Conclusions	561
General Conclusions	567
Bibliography & Sources	581
Index	609
Summary (Dutch, French)	617